

The concept of crime is not unknown among the natives. They judge misdemeanors according to ancient traditions; action is considered a moral offense if it is not in accordance with the principles held by the community as a whole. There is no written law; the punishment for each crime is [236] considered individually. No form of punishment, however, may exceed a certain degree of severity. Sometimes the offender may pay a fine to take the place of the punishment designated.